

Ten shared-experience reflections

Day 1 · Session 2 | Both sectors | Shared resource

Participation is optional. Stand, raise a hand or reflect silently as you prefer; you need not identify colleagues or institutions.

Stand if there are more people needing your service than your institution is staffed to serve.

Stay standing if you have ever been asked to do the work of a vacant post in addition to your own.

Stay standing if a decision that seriously affects your work is taken by a body you have never sat in.

Stay standing if your institution's budget is decided by people who have never watched you do your job.

Stay standing if there is money owed to somebody you work with — an allowance, a promotion, an arrear — that has not yet arrived.

Stay standing if the public judges your sector by its worst day rather than its ordinary one.

Stay standing if you have seen a good colleague leave for better pay, abroad or in the private sector.

Stay standing if there is an agreement in your sector that was signed and then not fully implemented.

Stay standing if you believe your sector is essential to this country's future, and does not always get treated that way.

And stay standing if you came here this week hoping to leave with something you can actually use.

Which experience connects the two sectors? What should our shared goal protect?
